Our Friday Three-Hour Sales

WE ASSOCIATE JUNE with the June bride, the native strawberry, the ripened cherry and other luscious bounties of nature. Each fruit is best in its natural season, but there are many good things which prevail in all seasons. Among the latter are the Friday Three-Hour Sales at the corner of Tremont and Beacon Streets. These have all seasons for their own, and only vary in the different seasons because, like wine and cheese, they constantly improve with age.

Rabbi's Renunciation of Christianity in Pulpit

I WOULD rather push a cart through the streets than go into the pulpit and preach Christianity.

If I ever preach in a Christian pulpit again, may my right hand forget its cunning, and may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth.

You don't know what it means for a Jew to be baptized—the renounced soul, the disrupted family, the desertion of friends, the loss of respect.

The name of Christ and of Christianity has so long been associated with the wrongs, sufferings, sorrows and persecutions of the Jew that an Israelite can never forget it.—Rev. Samuel Preuder.

RABBI'S DENIAL OF NEW FAITH

"I'll Push a Cart Before I'll Preach Again," Cries Rev. S. Preuder, Converted Jew.

DENOUNCES CONFERENCE

"I would rather push a cart through the streets than go into a pulpit and preach Christianity," declared the Rabbi Rev. Samuel Preuder, at the annual meeting of the Third Sabbath School of the Hebrew Montefiore Association, which was held last night at the Park Street Church.

Preuder, who has been converted since 1903, declared that he would never again preach Christianity in a pulpit.

He said that he had been asked to preach at the conference, but he had refused, and that he would never again do so.

He said that he had been asked to preach at the conference, but he had refused, and that he would never again do so.

CAPTAIN USED A PITCHFORK, SAYS SAILOR

United States Commissioner Thomas A. Hayes, 24, heard evidence today in the case under the seaman's protective act that has come before United States courts at Boston for more than two years.

Captain Jerome McDonald of the fishing schooner Precursor was taken into custody at Gloucester last night by Deputy Marshal Hancock, on complaint of Seaman Hugh Gillis, who alleges that Captain McDonald assaulted him with a pitchfork on the high seas.

Gillis testified that he was dressing fish on the deck of the Precursor on the night May 22, when the captain three times asked him the same question. Gillis said he had answered the question twice, but the third time he said: "I told you twice. Do you want me to sing it?"

As he stopped over to pick up another fish, Gillis alleges, the skipper rushed him with a pitchfork and thrust the tines into his arm, which, Gillis says, he threw up to protect his body.

Testimony to the effect that the captain made some kind of move toward Gillis and that he had a pitchfork in his hand at the time was offered by two other members of the crew, Patrick Whelan and Albert Chambers.

Captain McDonald admitted that he had trouble with Gillis at the time referred to, but said that he had never used a pitchfork and that he did not know that Gillis had suffered a wound on his arm until some days later.

Commissioner Hayes in summing up said that, in view of the fact that Gillis was heard of hearing, and that the captain did not know it, and the evident lack of intention on the captain's part to do any bodily injury to Gillis, the complaint against the captain should be dismissed, and therefore discharged Captain McDonald.

HOUSTON, Tex., June 4.—The condition of Congressman Lewis Powers is much improved today. Prayer for Backsliders

Prayer was offered by Charles Abrams of the Christian Union, a converted Jew, which he asked the Almighty that the Rabbi Rev. Samuel Preuder be brought to the realization of what he had done.

May all backsliders return to the faith, and may the remembrance of what he had done be a warning to all who are tempted to leave the faith.

Preuder was not uttered even offered and the reading of his letter was a warning to all who are tempted to leave the faith.

Yes, General Grant DID Drink—What of It?

He Did Some Other Things, That Cause the Drinking to Be Forgotten
Copyright, 1908, by American-Journal-Examiner

That was before Grant had found the work that he knew how to do. Taft talked along innocently, if tactlessly. His idea really was to praise General Grant, showing that he had achieved his marvelous success in spite of early misfortunes and mistakes.

There is a great tempest in the teapot now. Some wise owls are reviving fond memories of Run. Romanism and Rebellion, wondering what Taft will do to ruin his chances.

Before the campaign is over it will probably be possible to quote a good many things to interfere with Mr. Taft's chances. But so far as this particular Grant incident is concerned, we are bound to remark that Mr. Taft TOLD THE TRUTH, if rather roughly. And in these days the people don't object to men in public office telling the truth, EVEN ROUGHLY.

Truth is scarce and welcome. Unpleasant truths about a dead man in the presence of his own family, and inside of his own tomb, are a little out of place. Mr. Taft in his remarks was like the man who sat upon the stovepipe of the chief mourner at the funeral. However, he meant well, and he probably need not worry.

As for General Grant himself, NOBODY CAN HURT HIM OR HIS REPUTATION. What the people wanted of Grant, and what they got from him, was persistency, courage, bulldog grit, intelligent fighting. General Grant may have disappointed himself and his family for a few early years. His days ended in bitterness unfortunately, BUT HE NEVER DISAPPOINTED THE AMERICAN NATION.

When he began to fight for it he fought to the end, and he won. He won a great victory for the North, and he won as great a victory for the South, since he won continued brotherhood and continued unity for North and South.

Long faced, white faced, flabby faced, soft faced gentlemen with their minds on success, with starched collars and much propriety, are worried because Taft mentioned the fact that Grant left West Point and drank too much and tried to sell cordwood for a living, and failed, and became a sort of byword in the town.

Grant DID all of those things. And if you put a big grizzly bear in among a lot of cheap white rabbits or little sheep, HE would be the byword of the rabbit or sheep town also.

At West Point, or in any other school where they have straight backs, white chests, nice uniforms, admiring girls, AND PLENTY OF CHANCE FOR IDELNESS, the majority of the boys are happy and proud. But the exceptional man is neither happy nor proud in a shiny uniform and a life of idleness. Grant couldn't remain forever the little dancing peace-time gentleman of the army. He had to have action of some kind, even if he found it in failure.

He drank when he had nothing better to do, HE SAVED THE UNION WHEN HE HAD A CHANCE TO DO THAT.

He was not the first man to fail in little things and succeed in big things.

As for his failure to make a successful cordwood merchant out of himself, or to succeed in some other one of the eminent branches of applied selfishness which we call modern business, no man will blame Grant too severely for that.

The man who proves himself unfit for the penny-snatching struggles of the world, yet able to do one of the world's great tasks, finds himself in good company. Rousseau couldn't make any money. What little he had people had to give him as a present. He spent most of his life as a kind of a beggar, but everybody with a fragment of an education knows of his work and even those that never heard of him, those that don't know it, HAVE CHILDREN THAT ARE BEING TAUGHT ACCORDING TO HIS PRECEPTS. You hear of John Jacques Rousseau, the financial failure, and you know about him, although you never heard of Jacques Coeur, the Frenchman ahead of Rousseau who had fleets that covered the Mediterranean and millions that would almost interest Rockefeller.

Napoleon wasn't much of a success until the big chance came his way. He was a miserable little officer eaten up by the itch. He thought of suicide, and, worse, even tried to marry a fat, rich, old widow whom he didn't like.

He washed his own collars. HE, TOO, WOULD HAVE FAILED IN THE CORDWOOD BUSINESS IF HE HAD TRIED IT. But when the Revolution made France realize her power, when Danton, an ordinary French lawyer, defeated European kings and generals; when the French nation needed the work that Napoleon could do, the work that made an empire, but that meant a republic, NAPOLEON, LIKE GRANT, WAS READY.

If you should get in Napoleon's tomb, under the gilded dome of the Invalides, and tell of Napoleon's mistakes, it wouldn't hurt him any.

You might tell of the character of his first wife, and how well she knew Barras, and how well Napoleon knew how well she knew Barras. You might dig up all the seams in Napoleon's character and parade them, but that wouldn't hurt Napoleon.

Grant's mistakes, Napoleon's mistakes, Rousseau's mistakes, Newton's little religious foolishnesses—those things would look very big in a little man. You can't see them at all in a big man.

A crack that is big in a small china tea cup isn't much of a crack in the Rocky Mountains. And Taft needn't worry himself much about having pointed out one or two of the teapot cracks in that ruxed mountain, Ulysses S. Grant.

A Great Poem That Has a Great Meaning

THE question regarding her mean first in the poem "The Cost," published in a magazine some time ago and here quoted, Mrs. Wilcox replied:
"The desire of woman to achieve, to become man's equal and to be emancipated from the purely domestic realm of earth seems to have changed her nature from that of the original mother of the Creator."
In developing herself intellectually and commercially woman has stimulated many of the attributes with which she was endowed by the Creator, and everywhere they are growing more and more unconscious of the death blow to romance which such a spirit of competition between men and women to the intellectual and industrial world must deal.
It is an everyday occurrence to hear cultured and educated women refer with pride to their own lack of those natural instincts which make womanhood and motherhood sacred. It seems to be the intrusion of a growing class of women of cultivation and refinement that all matters relating to sex are coarse and vulgar.
I do not believe such women are formed according to God's first great plan. I believe they are the result of wrong conditions, first brought about by man's neglect, selfishness and cruelty.
"The failed to appreciate the natural normal wife, mother and housekeeper, and so woman was driven into the work of emancipating herself. She is emancipated; but she is paying 'The Cost.'"
That was what I tried to reproduce in my poem. But I think, after long years, she will again become normal, and with her added mentality and increased powers, she will then be a greater force in the universe than ever before. Every seeming detour of the race always leads on to higher development in the end.
Following is the poem referred to in the interview:

THE COST

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

God finished Woman in the twilight hour
And said, "To-morrow thou shalt find thy place;
Man's complement, the mother of the race.
With love the motive power—
The one compelling power."
All night she dreamed and wondered. With the light
Her lover came—and then she understood
The purpose of her being. Life was good
And all the world seemed right—
And nothing was, but right.
She had no wish for any wider sway;
By all the questions she—unveiled,
Man's complement, the mother of the race,
She passed upon her way—
Her feminine fair way.
But God neglected, when He fashioned Man,
To face the mother's agonies of his mind
With that sixth sense He gave to woman-kind.
And in He married His own great plan.
Aye, married His own great plan.
She asked so little, and so much she gave.
That man grew selfish; and she soon became
To God's great sorrow and the whole world's shame.
Man's sweet and patient slave—
His uncomplaining slave.
Yet in the nights (oh, nights so dark and long)
She clasped her little children to her breast
And wept. And in her anguish of unrest
She thought upon her wrong.
She knew how great her wrong.
And one sad hour, she said unto her heart,
"Since thou art cause of all my bitter pain,
I bid thee abdicate the throne; let brain
Rule now, and do its part—
The masterful, strong part!"
She wept no more. By no ambition stirred
Her ways led out, to regions strange and vast.
Men stood aside and watched, dumbstruck, aghast,
And all the world dumbstruck.
Mistaken her, and dumfounded.
She stood on and up, from barren to widening sphere,
Till thorny paths bloomed with the rose of fame.
Who once dreamed, now followed with acclaim.
"She has died in the cheer—
The loud, applauding cheer."
She stood triumphant in that radiant hour,
Man's mental equal, and competitor.
But, oh! the cost! from out the heart of her
That God gave love's motive power—
Love's all-compelling power.
